WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Northern California will continue to have a few more days of below normal temperatures while a low pressure trough lingers just off shore. The trough will be on the move through the Pacific NW Thursday, and gusty SW to W winds will develop near and east of the Cascade/Sierra crest Thursday afternoon. Reasonably widespread peak wind gusts around 40 mph are expected, and RH will drop to around 6-14% for several hours in these windy areas. Some afternoon cumulus clouds will probably be over the NW mountains Thursday as well, but they are unlikely to develop into thunderstorms. High pressure will take over the weather pattern over the weekend and marked warming will happen Saturday with afternoon highs somewhat above normal. As the high strengthens early next week, afternoon highs will gradually climb, and by the middle of next week will be around on the order of 5-10 degrees above normal with 105-108 in the warmest inland valleys. Afternoon highs around 110 may become possible late next week. Afternoon RH and overnight RH recovery will be quite low in a lot of areas under this weather pattern. The marine layer will also likely become quite thin under this pattern. Outside of the period of gusty winds mentioned for Thursday and some locally gusty northerly overnight Saturday, wind speeds will generally be quite light and mostly of local, terrain-driven diurnal patterns.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

High pressure over the southern half of the country will bring hot and very dry conditions away from the coastal areas through early next week. Maximum temperatures will be 5 to 10 degrees above normal, with 80s to low 90s across the mountains and mid 90s to 105 in the valleys. Minimum humidity will be mainly in the single digits and teens and there will be poor nighttime humidity recovery away from the coastal areas. There will be southwest to west winds of 15 to 25 mph across the desert slopes and desert passes this afternoon. Northwest to north night winds of 15 to 25 mph with gusts to 40 mph will surface across the mountains of Santa Barbara eastward to the Grapevine Area and across the Kern County Mountains Thursday through Saturday. No shower or thunderstorm activity is expected across the area through early next week.
